WOOD DECKING

Wood decking, especially teak, is popular for its natural beauty, durability, and low maintenance. Various wood types and finishes offer customization options that complement garden aesthetics. Hardwood decking is also budget-friendly, with prices varying depending on the material chosen. Selecting a reputable contractor ensures a quality deck that enhances your home's appeal.

PVC DECKS

PVC decking stands out for its distinct appearance and durability, offering a different aesthetic from wood or composite boards. Crafted solely from PVC plastic without wood fillers, these planks are resilient in outdoor conditions due to their inorganic composition. Available in capped and uncapped forms, capped PVC decking offers enhanced protection at a higher cost, while uncapped boards are more budget-friendly. Although not as structurally robust as wood or composite, PVC decking is lightweight and requires minimal maintenance.

COMPOSITE DECKING

Composite decking outlasts wood decking, boasting a longer lifespan. It demands minimal upkeep compared to its wooden counterpart and proves more cost-effective over its extended duration. Crafted from recycled materials and employing eco-conscious processes that repurpose water and waste, composite decking stands as a sustainable choice. Additionally, it offers enhanced safety features, ensuring peace of mind for users. PVC and composite decking boards offer durable, low-maintenance options for outdoor spaces.
